Tomorrow, when Mark Zuckerberg is in the warm seat in front of a bipartisan bevy of legislators in Congress, we can finally get some real answers. Or, at least this is what we hope. Because, until now, the CEO and Facebook founder did not say much ... despite interviews with more news outlets and a conference call with journalists last week. He has not given satisfactory answers to the questions we ask. The new revelations also mount on the use of personal information of the social network of personal information, so do strangers today. Zuckerberg has issued its opening statement to one of the Congress' commissions, and was more equal. He apologized and committed to doing more. He explained what we already knew, and promised that what happened in the last four years won't happen again. But it didn't happen without specifics. We're not really closer to understanding how big this Facebook problem is. Therefore, it is important that its founder and CEO really answer questions and follow-up queries and not only dance around them. Here are some themes that we hope Congress really hopes at home when it comes to head with Zuckerberg. Privacy of the most aspiring revelations about the rubbing of Cambridge Analytica Debauchery is how easy it was for a third party to collect dozens of millions of Facebooks Personal Data of users. This leads to the question: How does the privacy of the Facebook value user? While Zuckerberg is ready to say that it first puts customers, it hasn't changed much when it comes to these settings. This more, the company has done a practice of blurring what should be simple safeguarding privacy. Facebook has always wanted people to share more data with And it has long made it difficult to be more private. The last announced changes implicitly only the creation of a more centralized position for users to check their privacy settings; This does not indicate that Facebook really cares about the privacy of its users. The company the company By giving us more control over our privacy - it is simply built a new web page to check what has already been provided. What are Zuckerberg plans to make sure how users get more inspect? The director of the Center for Technology and Democracy of Privacy and Data, Michelle de Mooy, explained on the Podcast of the Organization that Facebook really owes users an explanation of their privacy rights. A This incident makes it seem like they appreciated their pretty low user privacy on the totem pole, he said, given that the data was wildly managed and there was no little or no responsibility until now. If Zuckerberg admits it or not, the entire Facebook business model is built on the delivery of data users, which is then sold to advertisers in aggregate form. If Facebook wants to earn at least one user trust lot, this transaction should demystify and provide more information about the data you use to build its advertising platform. This could mean radically changing the data of users who collect, or simply giving more control people about exactly what they want to share with Facebook and third parties. However it works, users should be given the ability to know exactly how much data is shared. This leads to questions about sharing predefined data, regardless of privacy settings. For example: when users limit data sharing as much as possible, what data is still shared? Is there any way to prevent Facebook to collect personal information? Put another way: Facebook is going to change its data-hovering practices à € "or at least better inform users about how they access their data? To put this in perspective, Facebook is able to monitor users on any website that uses its à € œCome à € à € à € "and is highly doubtful that most people on social networks understand how broad This monitoring is. What's more, we have no idea what kind of Facebook data keeps on not users. Given this, how exactly, are these data collection programs work, and Zuckerberg is thinking of them? Can people opt for this collection of data? And maybe more important, why do you still deserve our data? How the system works What this last saga made it clearer as Facebook works. Hidden under the veil of a political marketing company that uses the API of the Social Network, it is the fact that Facebook exists to collect personal data from its users to sell to customers. This is what makes it so powerful. Furthermore, the company checks how information spread to its platform using these bytes of information such as a refined tuner. An extremely pressing question is, because it wanted so for the company to understand that organizations like Cambridge Analytica were abusing this data? Facebook did not suspended Cambridge Analytica until last month and did not work to inform users that their data had been improperly accessible until this week. So why Facebook did not do more in the two years when he knew about the loss and weYour practices Weren't à € à, - à € t Kosher, yet slipped under the radar, how many others have acted in a similar way? Is it also possible to know who else has performed a similar job? This crisis was only possible because Facebook has allowed these third parties such accessed accesses without any responsibility. This aims at a systemic problem of giving priority to the needs of his advertisers on his users; Do you plan to move its commercial practices in the light of these revelations? Looking over Cambridge analytic analytic analytic analytic is not the only focus here; Zuckerberg is also called to the Congress to answer questions about electoral interference. These attempts to influence public opinion used both targeted advertising and the opaque facebook algorithm, presumably spreading content to unaware Americans. So, Facebook should be placed this simple question: How does your platform work? If the Social Network has so much power to potentially move the political needle, it is necessary to be much more transparent on the IT implement algorithm; A, what factors do some content lead to appear on a person's news feed and not another one? These foreign entities, of course, has not just twisted the Facebook algorithm, also purchased advertisements. The Social Network now says that political advertising is chapped, but we really don't know what it means what it means. What does this mean, for example, that Facebook has a technology in place to instantly detect when a foreign account is purchasing to political account? If so, is it automatic? And is there a human being in place to supervise the whole process? What the Congress excavates in depth in Facebook modes has built its advertising platform. Although the company says that it protects the user's privacy, he still provided proof of how he will change his program to better protect the billions of people who use it. In fact, his entire business model is expected to give third parties the type of information he gave to Cambridge Analytics. So, how do you can make sure that such an immoral is not repeated? Similarly, Zuckerberg is now telling us that he is working to solve this problem and analyze all the entities with which he shares the data. But Zuckerberg feels sure that he has resources and staff to control each app of third parties and continue to do so for the new apps that require such data? Finally, Zuckerberg has to go beyond the audience. It is no longer sufficient to say that Facebook takes care of its users and I am sorry that the company is messed up. The managing director needs to tell us exactly what went wrong, as it went wrong, and if it's brave enough to make the changes needed. The Facebook Managing Director Mark Zuckerberg had days of two days grilled by the congress. Put aside whatever your point of view on Zuckerberg and its desire to settle with profits, recent trip on Facebook, or privacy issues in general - answering 600 questions From big politicians can not be easy. He took me.If you have been called to the growth stand of the business court to be grilled on the central questions for your business plan? If you want a flourishing business you should be able to answer these 12 questions: I start here to make sure he's not thinking too small; That the market segment you want to serve is big enough to support a robust growth for the foreseeable future. The cleaner opened new sources of growth when they decided they were not in the detergent business but they were in the clothing business. The popularity of the brand of Usain Bolt exploded when decided to be in the entertainment business against Sprint.so ask yourself what business you really are in and what market segments/channels will compete to unlock a greater growth. No matter the business You cannot afford to everyone. Any successful brand that ever ran at Procter & Gamble was crystalline about who wanted to sell. On some brands, we even gave the name of the target consumer (like "Joanne") to bring the target to life. A clear and dark photo of your goal doesn't matter if you can't reach the target cost effectively. And it's critical that you understand where your audience might be more receptive to your message to improve the possibility of conversion to a sale. These are two different growth goals that require two different approaches. Many marketing plans are ineffective because they never begin from a place of clarity and prioritization on this. The most common advice I give to potential authors (approved by publishers to publishing houses) is that your "product" must fill a hole. Does the world need your product / service? What need will you encounter that is not achieved? What problem / your goal has your goal you can solve? It is very important to consider how your company will provide this value uniquely. If your offer is not differentiated from others and if the value proposition is not crystalline to potential buyers, growth definitely eludes you. At some point, Walmart's target audience was someone with a dollar in their pocket and any retailer that sold anything. Working with them as a "seller" over the years, I looked at them continuously improving and narrowing their target and becoming clearer to those who were their real competitors (for example worrying about competing with the dollar channel and online retailers more and less). First by serving your target audience (always) but then be clear about which competitors compare with and strategically against. Resources are limited after all. You have to skate where the record is directed as they say in hockey. The business landscape is scattered with companies that have not done (Kodak, Xerox, Blockbuster and so much more). Together with Time to question Six, you must consider this question, a question that Jeff Bezos usually believes for Amazon. Considering what will not change you keep concentrated on the delivery of the fundamentals that guide your business. It guarantees that you will have a sufficient time and effort against basics before pursuing new growth opportunities. It is vital that all your organization is clear about your winning aspiration (otherwise how it will achieve it). And note that too modest aspiration is much more dangerous than too high aspiration. I also discovered that the old saying "you get what you measure" is absolutely true, so as to sharpen the measuring systems. Many companies cannot articulate a price strategy. What is your price/bracket and why? In what conditions does the price rise or lower? When customers notice inconsistencies in how they manage the price can be confused or worse yet, they feel unjustly treated. Knowing how and where to make your money is the first part of this question. Then it's about designing a plan around the answer that optimizes the mix of things you sell to maximize profits (growth is not only reserved for after all revenues). Be clear about your company's values helps create the culture you want, informs you of decision-making, and acts as a lighthouse for decision-making in difficult times. Know what the purpose of the business is and maintain that in the front line guides meaning and commitment dependent supported. This is something I learned from working directly with facebook. The company spends most of its planning time on what will happen 30 years from now (which I have scaled to 10 years for the rest of us) or on what will happen in 6 months. The conviction is that we spend too much time on the 3-5 year plan, which can be absolutely unsuccessful if you work in environments that change a lot, which is many of us. This does not mean that you should not consider the 3-5 year plans, this is more than guaranteeing long-term planning has a greater influence on short-term actions. actions.
