New Jersey Hi Girls, We've been having trouble deciding how to word our invitations. We're paying for the majority of our wedding but my parents are paying for the honor of your presence of the marriage of their daughterme to FIson of ...I don't want to use, "together with their parents", because the future in-laws are not helping with the wedding, they're hosting our rehearsal dinner so those invites will indicate that. Is it tacky to do Mr. and Mrs. together with their daughter and future son-in-lawme and FIson of... And do we even need to put his parent's name on the invite with the "son of"Any suggestions would be greatly appreciated. Thank you!! This discussion has been closed. Written by Simple Wedding Invites If both the bride and groom's parents are hosting and paying for the wedding, how should your wedding invitation be worded to reflect this? Below are 3 simple decorums to follow. Decorum #1 - Name Position MattersThe bride and groom's parents should be listed first on the wedding invitation. Yes, this means before the bride and groom names. Decorum #2 - Wording should Reflect the Both Sets of Parents InvitingBecause the bride and groom's parents are hosting, they are doing the inviting. Wording in your wedding invitation should reflect this. For example, it should say something like "Mr. and Mrs. Smith and Mr. and Mrs. Smith important to have an open and honest discussion with them about their expectations and desires for the quest list. They may have certain family members or friends they want to invite, and it's important to take their wishes into consideration. The number of quests to invite will depend on a variety of factors, including the budget, the venue, and the couple's preferences. When the bride's parents are paying, they may have a limit on the number of guests they are willing to pay for. Remember to have a realistic estimate of the number of guests and to communicate openly with the bride's parents about any concerns. When creating a guest list, you should prioritize close family and friends. The bride's parents may have certain family members or friends they want to invite, and the couple should also have a say in who is invited. Communicate openly and respectfully about any disagreements or concerns. When it comes to design options, the sky is the limit. However, if the bride's parents are paying for the wedding, it's important to take their tastes and preferences into account when selecting a design. They may prefer a more traditional, formal style, or they may be open to more modern and creative design elements for the invitations. Some popular design options include: Classic and elegant designs with simple typography and minimal embellishments Floral and botanical designs that reflect the wedding's natural setting or theme Bold and modern designs with bright colors and unique typography Custom illustrations or photographs that reflect the couple's personality or interests When it comes to wording, there are a few key elements to include on the invitation. These include the names of the hosts, the names of the bride and groom, the date and time of the wedding, and the location of the wedding, they are typically listed as the hosts on the invitation. Some popular wording options include: Mr. and Mrs. John Smith request the honor of your presence at the marriage of their daughter, Jane, to John Doe... Together with their families, Jane Smith and John Doe request the honor of your presence at their wedding... When the bride's parents are listed as hosts on the invitation, you have to address them properly. Traditionally, the father's name is listed first, followed by the mother's name. For example: Mr. and Mrs. Jane Smith In some cases, the bride's parents may be divorced or have different last names. In these cases, it's appropriate to list them separately on the invitation. For example: Mr. John Smith and Mrs. Jane Brown Dr. John Smith and Ms. Ja requests that you need to be aware of. Be sure to provide guests with a way to communicate these requests to you, such as by including a line on the RSVP card where they can note any special needs. While it was more common in the past for the bride's family to pay for the wedding, nowadays, it is becoming increasingly common for both families, or even the couple themselves, to contribute to the costs of the wedding. Many couples are opting for more personalized and intimate celebrations, which may be more affordable than traditional large-scale weddings. Ultimately, who pays for the wedding is a personal decision that varies from couple and family to family. In conclusion, wedding invitations are an important part of the wedding planning process, and it's crucial to make sure that they reflect the couple's preferences and the family's financial circumstances. Whether you decide to work with a professional designer or create your invitations yourself, taking the time to plan and prepare your wedding invitations can help ensure that your special day is everything you dreamed of and more. When including the name of your parents on wedding invitations, be mindful of the simple conjunction "and" when placed between two names. If you and your partner, along with your parents, are all pitching in, there will be a need to include their names on the invitation. When writing wedding invitation wording from both sets of parents, make sure first and last names appear for both sets of parents, make sure first and last names appear for both sets of parents. Start with a warm and inviting greeting that sets the tone for the occasion. For example, "Together with their families" or

 "With joy in." When writing wedding invitation wording from the bride's parents, pay attention to first and last names of vour mother and father should come first, with each name having its own line. For couples of different sexes, list the names of the bride's parents at the top of the invitation for couples of different sexes, followed by those of the groom's parents. When planning the right words for your wedding invitations, it is perfectly acceptable to include your parents names on the wedding invitations. Some modern couples prefer to include the names of both sets of parents at the top of the invite, listing them as the hosts of the day. This is not just proper etiquette, but also a sign of respect and appreciation. In summary, when writing wedding invitation wording, consider the importance of honoring your parents and ensuring they are included in the invitation.

 married couples with the same last name. You can either use the man's full name (Mr. & Mrs. Bryant) or include both first names (Mr. ames). Formal: Mr. & Mrs. Bryant (without first names) or call them both by their first names (without last names). Formal: Mr. & Mrs. Mario Bryant or Mr. Mario & Mrs. Jill Bryant. Wedding invitations can be tricky, but this one is simple. You'll use both first names, but list the person you're closest with first. If you're equally close with both, list them in alphabetical order. (Image Source: Pixabay.com) How to word an invitation when both parents are hosting? Use the parents' names together or separately for readability. This lets you use different layouts for invitations. Each name can be on its own line. 1. Hosts. List the wedding hosts here. This can be the bride's or groom's parents, both, or neither. For a more informal tone, list the parents' first and last names instead of titles. For example: Cheryl and William Lewis. The woman's name is listed first. See below for hosting scenarios and coordinating wording examples. Please come. There are many ways to word the request line. For formal weddings, the traditional line is "The honor of your presence is requested." Other options include: Bride's name. The bride's name is first. If her parents are mentioned, only her first name is required. For same-sex marriages, only the groom's name is needed. To explain invitation wording clearly, we use a bride and groom scenario.  parents are contributing financially to the wedding, it is important to properly acknowledge and include them on the wedding invitation. This ensures that all parties feel recognized and included in the celebration. Here is a suggested wording invitation when both parents are hosting: [Host Line] Mr. and Mrs. [Bride's Parents' Names] And
Mr. and Mrs. [Groom's Parents' Names] [Request Line] Request the honor of your presence At the marriage of their children [Bride's Full Name] (Ceremony Details) Followed by a reception (Reception Venue and Time) It is important to note that the host line traditionally begins with the bride's parents' names and is followed by the groom's parents' names. This order can be adjusted if preferred, but it is customary to start with the bride's parents. Including both sets of parents on the host line is a way to show gratitude and appreciation for their financial contribution and support. It also signifies the union of two families coming together to celebrate the marriage of their children. When addressing the request line, it is appropriate to use a formal tone and request the honor of the guests to share in the joy of the couple's union. Next, include the full names of the bride and groom Using their full names adds a touch of formality and ensures there is no confusion regarding the identities of the ceremony, including the date, time, and venue, This information should be clear and concise, making it easy for guests to understand when and where the ceremony will list the bride's name first, followed by the groom's full name and title. However, this tradition is not set in stone, and you can arrange the names in the order that sounds and looks best. For very formal weddings, it is customary to write out the full names, including middle names. For less formal affairs, you may prefer to use just the first and last names or even nicknames. It's entirely up to you. "Julia French and Austin Mahoney request the honour of your presence..." Emma and Jax request the pleasure of your company... "Grace and Russell Fitzpatrick are getting hitched!"  especially if your wedding has a theme. You can add a quirky twist to the request to attend, reflecting the tone of your special day. Examples: Saturday, August 17, 2024, 4:30 in the afternoon (or 4:30 p.m.) - Party to follow Saturday, 09.17.24 4:30 p.m. - Eat, drink, and be merry!Location and reception details The location and reception details are essential components of a wedding invitation. Here are some tips and examples to help you word this section effectively:Location Information:Venue Name and Address: Include the name and full street address of your wedding venue. For formal invitations, spell out the state and use the zip code. If your wedding is taking place abroad, provide the country as well-known venue or a private residence, in which case the address may be omitted to avoid confusion. Destination Weddings: For

below your host line to keep your invite streamlined. For example, "Mr. Morgan and Mr. and Mrs. Jones-Fray". Request lines often use phrases such as "request the honour of your presence", "invite you to join them for their wedding day" or "request the honour of your company". Traditionally, the bride's name is listed before the groom's name.
However, you don't have to stick with tradition. Include the full date along with the year to avoid any confusion. For formal invitations, write out the full date and time, including "o'clock".
