If youre thinking about tying the knot in Georgia, as in any state, youll need to do a bit of planning ahead of time. One of the items on your checklist? Getting a marriage license. In order for the government to legally recognize your union, you'll need this legal document (especially for taxes and insurance). Since you and your partner will both need to appear in person at a specific bureau to obtain your license, if you dont currently reside there, youll have to schedule a trip to get this necessary wedding detail squared away. For help navigating this process with ease, we turned to Melinda Guess, a her couples as they obtain their licenses. Wondering how to get marriage license in any county in the state, regardless of where your wedding is taking place. However, if neither of you is a resident and you're traveling to Georgia for your nuptials, you must apply for your marriage license in the county's probate court. For instance, in Fulton County, where Atlanta is located, you can apply at one of three probate courts, which are open from 8:30 a.m. to 4 p.m. and welcome walk-ins (although, there may be a wait time of up to two hours, Guess notes). In some counties, such as Chatham County (where Savannah is) or Clayton County (a more rural part of the state), you may have to file a request online before you secure an in-person appointment to sign the forms. Check the county you're applying in for their specific requirements. Since there is no expiration date for Georgia marriage licenses dont expire, so I encourage my couples to go as early as possible to check it off the list, Guess says. Without any waiting period, you can tie the knot immediately after you receive your form. In most counties, you'll receive your license the same day you apply, but to be on the safe side, it's best to plan ahead of time. There are a few items you'll need to bring to your in-person appointment in order to get a marriage license in Georgia.
