[3] The premise was the governor of the daughter of Louisiana kidnapped by a criminal, which has linked dynamite to his head and threatened to blow up his maximum in 48 hours, if the ransom was not reached. The most petty policeman goes to the worst state prison and comes out the most fierce criminal for the knowledge of him the kidnapper, who was the cell companion of him. Walter Hill says Gordon can have had the idea back to 1971 and some writers worked on the project. In 1975 Gordon was making Hard Times with the writer-director Walter Hill and Roger Spottiswood Editor. Spottiswood Editor. Spottiswood evanted to direct and HILL suggested that he breaks in writing a script. He made a 48-hour project under the hill supervision for Columbia Pictures, which had financed 48 hours. Later Tracy Keenan Wynn worked on the screenplay [4] The film moved from Columbia to Paramount, which wanted to make a Clint Eastwood as the criminal. He did it "But when I turned into I said I didn't think he would work," Hill said, adding "that the best idea would be to do Richard Pryor the criminal and have someone like Eastwood playing the policeman. Back in the '78 or 199 nobody seemed to think that this was such a good idea. "[4] Eastwood ended up playing a criminal fleeing from Alcatraz instead. As a result, 48 HRS. He went to a limbo for two years. However Gordon and his co-producer Joel Silver did not forget the project. Gordon calls Hill and asked him if he would have made the movie with Nick Nolte as Cates. [3] "Paramount considered that the combination of nicknames nolted and a good black actor would be commercial," said Hill. "What happened is very simple: Richard Pryor is now a huge movie star, and which has changed everyone's mind on black cable players." From the beginning, hill imagined a more improvisation film than he ever created. "The story is the traditional urban thriller: two terrible boys are outside and must be felled," he said he. "But even if I like working in kinds, the point is always to explode or give them a transfusion. So I took a very conscious decision to go with the elements of the two players' personality, rather than being overly genuflective to narration. Pushing a white policeman and a black prisoner together leads so much the gravity that we didn't have to beat the black-black thing to death. If it works, it is because of the personality of the actors. "[4] The first choice of HILL after Richard Pryor was Gregory Hines. When it was not available, Hill is a girl then Hilddy Gottlieb recommended her customer, Eddie Murphy, so better known for his work on Saturday Night Live. [5] The Character of Reggie Hammond was originally called Willie Biggs, but Eddie Murphy felt that he was too stereotyped of a black man's name and changed in Reggie Hammond. Steven E. de Souza has worked Screenplay for a couple of weeks after Eddie Murphy was launched. Critic Michael Sragow says: "Manufacturers recommend De Souza to Hill because they thought he would be good at adding a light touch to the Hill action he did not find De Souza to Hill because they thought he would be good at adding a light touch to the Hill action he did not find De Souza to Hill because they thought he would be good at adding a light touch to the Hill action he did not find De Souza to Hill because they thought he would be good at adding a light touch to the Hill action he did not find De Souza to Hill because they thought he would be good at adding a light touch to the Hill action he did not find De Souza to Hill because they thought he would be good at adding a light touch to the Hill action he did not find De Souza to Hill because they thought he would be good at adding a light touch to the Hill action he did not find De Souza to Hill because they thought he would be good at adding a light touch to the Hill action he did not find De Souza to Hill because they thought he would be good at adding a light touch to the Hill action he did not find De Souza to Hill because they thought he would be good at adding a light touch to the Hill action he did not find De Souza to Hill because they are the Hill action he did not find De Souza to Hill action he did not find De Souza to Hill action he did not find De Souza to Hill action he did not find De Souza to Hill action he did not find De Souza to Hill action he did not find De Souza to Hill action he did not find De Souza to Hill action he did not find De Souza to Hill action he did not find De Souza to Hill action he did not find De Souza to Hill action he did not find De Souza to Hill action he did not find De Souza to Hill action he did not find De Souza to Hill action he did not find De Souza to Hill action he did not find De Souza to Hill action he did not find De Souza to Hill action he did not find De Souza to Hill action he did not find De Souza to Hill action he did not the personality contributed (Very few of which were used), and he did not develop the relationship with De Souza who would then have with Gross. "[4] Hill, proposed Larry Gross at work on the three-week script before shooting. [6] He said Gross." I worked this guy and while I like em I know he is not going to work out "and He called the movie "A hairy dog story. Mudger wall. "[7] Sragow says:" Hill was known during his career for the definition of characters through the action rather than psychological badinage, but he knew that this film would have been more than a piece of character of a texture picture, and He wanted a writer who would challenge his habits and hiring. During the filming, hill joked about the fact that he shook the flag called "myth and archetype" - giving to play off folkloristic expectations an audience could have for a great blonde hero as nick note-, while Larry Gross waved a flag called "social realism And psychological." Report of the writers has become so symbiotic that Gross often Hill comes down on the side of the S & PR and Gross defending the prerogatives of M & A" [4] Gross says that its main contributions were:. l'Idea that Reggie Hammond wanted to have sex after three years of prison; Nick Nolte have a relationship between Nick and his girlfriend, his own Head and killers. The killers were sharpened and made more interesting ... whenever Walter could invent a monologue for one of the things I think makes 48 hours. Really more interesting than the average type of film like this, "says his co-screenwriter," is that, even if women perform relatively small roles in the narration, what kind of imagination meeting of all. The film is actually a sort of demented comedy of men and women trying to be together, even if it is a piece of very conventional gangster. "People had this perception of Walter being melancholy," Gross said. "And now that he made this movie nobody thinks it's more melancholy." [8] Filming began on 17 May 1982. [9] Murphy began a few weeks after shooting began because © was finishing a season of Saturday Night Live. [3] [10] Shooting went well, but HILL encountered problems with study leaders. Michael Eisner, then Capo della Paramount, was worried that the movie wasn't funny enough. Hill and its co-screenwriter, Larry Gross wrote more material for nolte and murphy's personality. On behalf of Hill, they rewritten Murphy character for the last day of shooting. The leaders also found the shooting movie in the hotel to be too violent and were worried that he would kill the film humor. Hill said he would never work for Paramount again as a result. [3] Actor Chris Mulkey, he said he was widely known on the set that the leadership paramount hated what they had seen Murphy's performance in newspapers and wanted to fire him, but nolte and Hill fought to keep him. Mulkey remembered Murphy as diligent performer that was open to suggestions and stuck to the script. [11] In 2008, the contemporary diary of co-screenwriter Larry Gross of the days of him on the set was published on the MoviCityNews website.
