The area surrounding Augusta National Golf Club's address on Washington Road is undergoing significant changes, some of which will be difficult to notice from the road. The most prominent addition is a tunnel connecting the club to its new broadcast complex. This underground passage measures 26 feet wide, 16 feet high, and approximately 10 feet beneath Washington Road. Meanwhile, several businesses have come and gone, including Top Dawg Tavern, Tin Lizzy's Taqueria Cantina, and Famous Dave's Barbecue, which have been replaced by establishments like Metro Diner, PDQ, and Take 5 Oil Change. Additionally, the Venus & Adonis beauty salon has given way to Summer House Realty, an office and event venue with a unique Art Deco design. Washington Road's Desirability Hinges on Acquisition, Development Push That piece of land has maintained its appeal over the years due to its prime location. A 1924 ad in the Augusta Chronicle listed a five-room cottage and two barns on over 37 acres for sale, with an asking price of $5,000 - equivalent to around $80,000 today. According to estimates, this property could be worth approximately $30 million in today's market. If we consider the purchasing power of $5,000, Collier believes it wouldn't even cover the cost of a single billboard on Washington Road today.
