I pick up televisions, computers and things like this business and this week they gave me an old Zenith. Now, if I had realized how old and interesting it was, I would have taken pictures of the process. Ahh well. The last part that dismantled showing a date of 6.2.62. The front "Bezel" was aluminum, the transport handle was brass and had a dozen vacuum tubes in him. Very great, but unfortunately I could not find a lot of information in it. Maybe it was better to leave it intact for restoration but a little late for that. I just wanted to share a clean find. 08.01.2013, 08:53 pm 08.01.2013, 10:24 PM # 2 Put everything again by fewer the CRT and launch an LCD screen in this. What kind of courage I hope you don't mind the questions and thank you in advance. I don't know the value, but it's worth my time (15 sec.) to get them out of the low grade boards. Like many other things we do, when we get enough, then we will receive attention from the buyers. Even a hobby refiner needs quantity to make it worthwhile. And I'm sorry about the bad picture on the camera. 08.04.2013, 11:44 PM # 18 Me with some of the people. I had one that I felt forever and I finished. As luck works, the next week was presented to a companion, interested in ancient television as that. He became good with The company that dealt with the old electronics (Small TV repair shop, closed, made me sad man, in my hometown and all). He gave me pertere all his old equipment. He made a good profit from the resale. He gave me 14 of those little zeniths. Still in its pretty stand. It was sold each for $200 to a man restaurateur. It's worth sitting on them dinosaurs. You'll kick yourself if you don't. Good find, thanks for the post. Page 2 08.01.2013, 8:53 PM # 1 Very clean Find today from a customer.
