Website Gliffy is a free web-based diagram tool along Microsoft Visio lines. If the creation of flow charts, floor floors or practically everything you would consider a diagram, the Uliffiff seems actually that can manage it. Another great thing about Gliffy is that it keeps records of all your revisions, which makes a breeze collaboration - just add and remove collaborators who can access your document and uliffy take care of rest. With the Most web-based applications (so far), you may not want to move all your projects online if you create a lot of diagrams, but if you need to slap a diagram every now and then, but I don't want to pay the Microsoft award for Visio, Gliffy looks like A similar aspect of solid choice. Gliffy [Via CNet] Back to the past not too far, the people looking for gifts were needed for the shower, dress and cold cold winds and irritated buyers to choose holiday gifts. Fervent bargain seekers have impatiently expected the openings of the Black Friday store (the day after thanksgiving) as the engines inactive awaiting ignition. Children launched the catalogs of toy stores such as automas from Doe's eyes, leaving them openly open to certain pages in the hope that the catalog somehow help their parents at the mall. It was a bad and brutal time. The uncertainty reigned.Help would arrive at the end of the 1960s when computer scientists at the US defense department created Arpanet - the predecessor of the Internet. We didn't know at that time, but holiday shopping would never be the same. We didn't have to go to the store anymore! Instead, companies have opened online virtual stores. Consumers could make their purchases day or night, respectably dressed or completely naked. Alive the largest number of paradigm journeys, the advent of online shopping has brought changes to the status quo. In stores, it is necessary to keep only the guard of vigilants of their portfolio to guarantee security; Not so online. It is exponentially easier to affirm the will of its own temporary seasonal aid will when returning an object in stores. Once again, this is not as online. In this vein, HowTuffWorks has arranged five simple tips for online shopping. Let's start on the next page. During online shopping, plastic is the preferred payment meod. However, you must remember that your credit card number is static. It does not change unless you close and reopen an account and once your credit card information is online, it can be compromised if it falls into the wrong hands. There are some measures that online buyers can adopt to minimize their risk. First of all, it ensures that all online purchases are performed only on secure sites. To be sure of the page you are sure, look for a small padlock icon, usually found in the upper right corner of your browser's URL bar. You can also tell if the site is sure looking for an "S" in the URL address. While unsafe sites and pages start with http: //, protected sites begin with https web browsers: //some now have larger certification windows that are easier to read and allow users to examine the information of Website more carefully. For example, if you intend to control online purchases using the Safe Circuit City Web page, but the name of the page on the page certificate does not match, steering the cities clear and notice of the problem of the problem. Do not send your account numbers or any other personal information via e-mail, which is not safe [source: FTC]. For this Reason, you should never access a website to buy an e-mail link [Source: Consumer Report]. Now, how should you pay for all that booty? Discover the next page.Shopping online is easier with plastic, but some plastic is better than others. It is advisable only for HEY credit cards, rather than debit cards, for online shopping. Credit cards represent a credit extension, while debt cards absorb directly from your bank account. Once in possession of your banking information, hackers can do many more damage to your finances than with the credit card number. Right right Billing act, consumers are protected in the event of identity theft or fraud - if they use a credit card. This law protects the account holders by limiting their fraud responsibility to $ 50. Payments for unauthorized debits to a credit card can also be put on hold and studied [source: FTC]. Even better, most credit card companies offer more protection, sometimes limiting consumer responsibility for fraud at zero. The use of a debt card also offers you federal protection. If you notify your bank of a fraudulent debt card purchase within two days your responsibility is limited to $ 50; After that it rises to $ 500 [Source: BankRate]. Most credit card company offer now disposable credit card numbers for online shopping. These expire after a purchase and only your credit card knows that they represent is tied to.using only a credit card for online shopping is another great way to avert the potential online business headache [source: consumer Reports]. If you have a credit card number sent by cyberspace, the fraud potential is limited to that account. If you have a hacker to get your account information, you will only need this credit card company for the commercial accounts could finally mean the death of the physical retail store, buta even if it happens, one thing will be constant: the warehouse. We will always need to store large quantities of objects and employ people in stock these warehouses. Warehouse robots take their job, warehouse employees require salaries for work running. Pay a person for recovery, packaging and shipping of an object you purchased online is already incorporated in a retailer's costs. But if you return the object, it has yet to be repacked and replaced, although the company has not made money from the return. As a result, online retailers have started uploading refueling commissions on returned items. It is reasonable requirement, but some refueling rates are easier to swallow than others. While some retailers charged up to 25 percent or more, a fee of 15 percent of the price paid for the returned object has become customary for intensely packaged products, such as electronics. Before proceeding at the cash desk, familiarize with the retailer's repatriation policies, which must be explicitly indicated somewhere on its Web Site.Simply packaged items such as non-open books and DVDs should not cost the money to return. Likewise, if you are returning the product because it's bad, you should not be required to pay any return fee. If you have damaged the UPC code of the product or serial number, however, don't worry about trying to return it - you have practically taken the object permanently out of circulation. You can try to recover a part of what you paid by listing the voice on Craigslist or eBay.Online shopping presents to consumers with a wonderful new advantage - the ease of Bargâ.Ain hunting. Before purchases via the internet, find the lowest price for an article intended by browsing catalogs and circulars, traveling from shop to shop or to hit the yellow pages for a call binge.
